

STREET EXTENSION AND FIREWORKS SALE
DISCUSSED BY BOARD

At the session of the City Council at the City Hall last Monday evening, the matter of opening Irvington street between Acton street and Templeton avenue was discussed, it finally being decided to postpone definite action for two weeks, when all of the members of the City Council are expected to be present. Mayor H. H. Smith and Councilman A. J. Bodien were not present at Monday night's meeting.

There was also a discussion of the fireworks ordinance, regarding the sale of torpedos and other noise-making devices. The matter of the interpretation and enforcement of the ordinance was referred to the police department.

City Clerk B. C. Ross made application, in accordance with law, for permission to leave the state for two weeks, on his annual vacation, and permission was granted.

Several communications received at this session were laid over for two weeks, when all the members of the Council will be present.

Tomai pitched a steady game and received sparkling support from his teammates.

MRS. M. PARMISANO PASSES AWAY AFTER SHORT ILLNESS

It was with much regret the many friends of Mrs. Mary Parmisano learned of her death on last Wednesday evening after a short illness. Mrs. Parmisano was the beloved wife of August Parmisano, and mother of Samuel J., Rose, Lewis, Anthony and Albert Parmisano. Mrs. J. Reardon and Mrs. M. Rancatore, and loving sister of Mrs. Gatto, Mrs. C. Carbone, Mrs. M. Maresco and the late Louis Cafeo. The funeral was held on Saturday morning at 9:30 o'clock from the mortuary chapel of W. C. Laswell & Co., 6154 Mission street, thence to St. Maximus Church, where a requiem high mass was celebrated for the repose of her soul. Interment was at Holy Cross Cemetery.

SMALL CHILDREN HIT MOST OFTEN

Children between the ages of five and nine are most likely to be injured in traffic accidents, according to Chief of Police Doyle.

In a survey made in California, it was shown that children in kindergarten and the lower grades are active enough to play in the streets, and yet fail to learn the necessity of keeping watch for approaching automobiles. The death rate for this class is therefore more than twice that of any other five-year period.

Tiny children are usually kept in the house or in rear yards. Accidents to children less than five years old usually occur through motorists backing out of garages to the street.

With schools throughout the state closing for the summer this month, Chief Doyle urged all drivers to use additional caution while operating their machines in districts where children may be playing. These districts are usually in the residential sections of cities and towns, or in the neighborhood of parks, playgrounds or beaches.

Charles Heller and Martin Johnson were the guests of honor at the dinner last week, which was for the members only. It was a "Maggie and Jiggs" dinner, with all the trimmings, and was greatly enjoyed by those present.

The next birthday dinner to be given by the members of Company No. 3 will be held on September 20, when the birthdays of six members will be celebrated.

GENEVA AVENUE PASTOR AT LOCAL M. E. CHURCH

Rev. George Clarence Pearson, pastor of the Geneva Avenue Methodist (Community) church, will be the preacher Sunday evening at the Daly City Methodist church. You are sure to enjoy his message. Make it a point to attend the services.

In the California Christian Advocate the latter part of last year was an article entitled "When Will It Happen?" written by Bishop Charles Edward Locke. Read it carefully, for it is an important question.

"My friend," said a rather frank but well informed man of progressive doctrinal thinking, "your orthodox position seems to me untenable, if not unreasonable. I cannot subscribe to your belief in an inspired Bible, nor a blood atonement, nor to the physical resurrection of Jesus, nor to the Deityship of Jesus, and I am not at all secure in my confidence in the immortality of the soul; although I believe firmly that God is good, and that He is a living heavenly Father."

"My brother," replied the sincere man of rather old-fashioned theological views, "In this world of mysteries, presided over by a God of infinite personality, it is a wonder that infinitesimal finites like ourselves can understand anything. We should, not any of us, become too dogmatic concerning our beliefs, and should cultivate receptive minds."

"I confidently believe in all of these great doctrines which are puzzling you, but if we differ from each other in our conscientious interpretations, each of us will be judged according to our honesty and sincerity."

"Every man will have his own Christ, and if he follows his holy ideal and conforms his life to the truths and spirit of Jesus, he will doubtless share in the salvation which Jesus brought to a dying world, even if he is not sure whether Jesus had one human parent or two, or is uncertain regarding the mysteries of the atonement, or whether he thinks everything in the Holy Bible is wholly inspired."

"And John answered Him, saying, 'Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us; and we forbade him, because he followeth not us.' But Jesus said, 'forbid him not, for there is no man which shall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of me. For he that is not against us is on our part.'"

Celebration at County Park

An invitation to the public to attend a celebration of the Fourth of July at San Mateo County Memorial Grove near Pescadero has been issued by officials of the American Legion posts in San Mateo, Burlingame and Redwood City.

A GREAT DAY

On July 4th, 1776, just 152 years ago, the Declaration of Independence was signed. A small group of colonists, lovers of liberty, of democracy, of human rights, determined to wrest those rights from England or give their all in the attempt. It required unselfish courage to arrive at that determination, sacrifices freely given to carry it through. All are familiar with the manner in which these were made and the victory that was won.

Yet this was but the beginning. Many problems confronted the young nation, countless difficulties had to be surmounted. Fortunately, the men who assumed leadership adhered closely to those broad principles laid down in the Declaration of Independence, and guided the nation towards its destiny and power, prosperity and riches. From that small group of colonies there sprung one of the most prosperous and powerful countries of the world.

It is with pride and satisfaction that one is known as a citizen of the United States of America—a country that is known throughout the world as a land of freedom, equality and democracy. And in return for the many privileges afforded by such a citizenship, everyone should undertake to perform efficiently and conscientiously the duties and responsibilities involved and take an interest in public and national affairs.

There are still many questions of vital importance to be decided, and it is up to the people as a whole to see that these are handled wisely. For instance, it must be decided to what extent the policy of restrictive immigration will be carried, the best method of education, the administration of justice, the election of public officials, and others of like nature.

During the first years of the country's existence many were needed to till the soil and develop the resources. There were practically no restrictions upon immigration, and they came from every land in large numbers. Naturally, the population increased swiftly. The people became amalgamated and there originated a distinctive American race. In the last two decades it has become apparent that unless measures were taken the country would be quickly over populated and the basic stock of America obliterated by aliens.

Measures were taken to reduce the incoming number, resulting at last in the passage of the restrictive immigration act of 1924. This limited the number to be admitted each year to about 160,000, and included also a national origins clause, the purpose of which was to apportion the quota of each country according to the basic stock in the United States. It has been decided a practical and feasible plan by those appointed to make investigation, but yet its enactment has been delayed from year to year.

With millions of youth to educate, the public schools have become one of the country's largest and most important industries—an industry the product of which is men and women; their qualities dependent to a large extent upon the efficiency with which the industry functions. The construction of the buildings, the right type of teacher, and many questions relative to the schools are of vast importance to the nation. Yet there is no Department of Education, no direct representative of these millions of prospective citizens in the President's Cabinet. A bill providing for this has been before Congress for several sessions, yet has never been reported out of committee, despite indication that it would pass if reported.

The courts are behind, the jails in many communities are filled, those committing crimes are held in waiting months before being brought to justice. Often those most deserving of punishment are allowed to go free or escape with only a minimum fine. It is claimed that crime is on the increase. It is for the people to search out the reason for this and correct the evil.

Then finally, a duty of prime importance to every citizen is the intelligent use of his right of franchise. Since public officials are elected by the people, and the welfare of the nation is largely dependent upon those officials, it is necessary that the people not neglect this duty and make sure that the best qualified are elected. This can be accomplished only if a large majority, and not a minority, cast their votes after a careful study of each candidate's qualifications.

There are many other reasons why every citizen should be awake to his responsibilities, display patriotism in peace as well as in war, not think of love for the country and allegiance to it only on the Fourth of July, but every day of the year.

Let the consistent devotion and the patriotism of every individual of the nation form a great and indestructible monument to the memory of the many thousands of great men who by their sacrifices have created this glorious country. And do not forget that each citizen today has a part, even though it may be a seemingly small one. H.

HOOVER WILL BE NOTIFIED AT HOME

The little city of Palo Alto, home of Secretary Herbert Hoover, is one of the most widely advertised cities in the United States these days.

And at a date to be set later, probably the latter part of July, there will be a large crowd wending its way to the home of the Republican presidential candidate than ever journeyed to that city to see a "Big Game."

Dispatches from Washington announce that Secretary Hoover will be notified formally of his nomination as candidate for President on the Republican ticket at his home at Palo Alto between July 25 and August 1. This was announced as definite by Secretary Work, Republican chairman, as the candidate plunged into work of setting up his campaign organization.

The job of setting up his campaign organization was occupying the time of Hoover, said the dispatch, and he conferred with Work and James W. Good, his pre-convention campaign manager. Good was slated to become Western manager of the Republican campaign, though it had not been announced whether he could arrange his personal affairs to accept the place.

Dr. Albert Shaw, magazine editor, and several others, including Senator Gillett, Republican, Massachusetts, were on the engagement list at the Commerce Department.

AGED RANCHER RUN DOWN BY AUTOMOBILE

Anton L. Bello, aged 78, a rancher of Half Moon Bay, was struck and killed near his home Tuesday night by an automobile. County Traffic Officer Quinlan gave chase and found the car overturned in a ditch two miles down the road. L. B. Aranguena and Mrs. Hyantha Lindsay, both of No. 2 Guerrero street, San Francisco, were taken from the wreckage, badly cut and bruised and were lodged in the county jail at Redwood City. Aranguena charged with manslaughter and intoxication. Bello, born in the Azores, went to Half Moon Bay sixty years ago and was one of its oldest residents. He is survived by seven children, all living in the Bay district.

OPPONENTS OF BOXING RENEW THEIR FIGHT

The San Mateo City Council last Tuesday granted a permit to John J. Hill, promoter, to alter the Pacific City Pavilion into a boxing arena. Despite the protests of Burlingame and San Mateo citizens, Hill was given permission to hold fights there two weeks ago.

Opponents of boxing in San Mateo county, including church organizations and members of the city council in Burlingame are said to be preparing to renew their fight against licensing the shows at Pacific City.

The action came when it was discovered that alterations on the dance pavilion at Pacific City have been undertaken by John J. Hill, promoter. Opponents of the enterprise have been under the impression, they said, that Hill would not proceed to act on his permit because of the high cost of meeting sanitary regulations of San Mateo.

With the issuance of a permit to proceed with erection of seats in the pavilion and other alterations, opponents learned that Hill has not abandoned his program because of excessive costs for water supply, special police provisions and sewer connections, as was reported shortly after the issuance of the boxing permit three weeks ago.

SWART AGAIN HONORED BY DISTRICT ATTORNEYS

District Attorney Franklin Swart, Redwood City, having resigned as secretary of the Association of District Attorneys of California, at the state convention of the association held at Del Monte on Saturday, was almost immediately elected vice-president of the body.

Swart had served as secretary for 18 years, since the founding of the association. Increasing official business was given as the reason for his retirement.

A. B. Tinning of Contra Costa county was elected president of the association and Orrin J. Lowell of Placer county was elected to succeed Swart. The next convention will be held at Eureka June 19 and 22 of next year.

PLAN ELIMINATION OF STEEP GRADES
IN BAY SHORE ROAD

Work is to begin immediately on elimination of the present steep grade and winding route of the Bay Shore road over Sierra point, just north of South San Francisco, under proceedings voted last Monday by San Mateo county supervisors, who abandoned a two-acre right of way for the former San Bruno turnpike, once a toll road, and accepted from the Southern Pacific Company a 20-acre tract for rights of way over a railroad tunnel through the point.

The State Highway Commission will begin immediately on a deep cut through the point, which will give the road a grade of not more than 3 or 4 per cent. and will eliminate the devious route, engineers told the board.

The distance is about three miles and earth from the cut will be used in extensive fills along the bay shore near the point, it was stated. Crews will be started from the north end of the proposed new route and also from the south just as quickly as bids can be received, engineers said.

In a special session with directors of the San Mateo County Chamber of Commerce, the supervisors denied an appropriation of $1400 asked by the San Francisco Examiner for a special Peninsula edition. Roscoe Wyatt, secretary, and Ira Potter, vice-president of the chamber, advised against the outlay on the ground that the chamber can afford but a small advertising appropriation and that it should not be spent on a single project.

Letters opposing the advertising scheme were received at the meeting from Leonard Read, manager of the Burlingame Chamber of Commerce and from Elmore B. Hinman, president of the Redwood City chamber. Both organizations had voted against the appropriation, the communications said.

DRIVE CAREFULLY DURING VACATION

Causes of accidents involving pedestrians are outlined in a bulletin issued by the California Development Association. The statistics show that carelessness of children results in 42 per cent. of accidents; carelessness of adults, 32 per cent; recklessness of drivers, 19 per cent; and other causes, 7 per cent.

The survey shows, then, that the driver is responsible for 19 per cent of accidents affecting children, but it is always the child who pays the penalty of death or injury.

Public schools are closed for the summer, releasing hundreds of thousands of school children from their classes for two months or more.

Careful, attentive driving will eliminate those accidents attributed to the motorist, as well as many more for which the child is deemed responsible, but which can be avoided if the motorist uses additional caution.

Remember, it is the motorist who wields the instrument that causes the accident to a pedestrian, and therefore he should accept the principal responsibility.

LEGION TO CELEBRATE INDEPENDENCE DAY

From Oregon to the Mexican line the three hundred and more posts of the American Legion of California will observe with fitting ceremony the nation's one hundred and fifty-second birthday.

At Santa Barbara, former National Commander of the Legion, John R. Quinn, will be the speaker of the day. Department Commander Phil Dodson will fill several engagements in the south while State Adjutant James K. Fisk has been invited to speak at Oakland's airport on Bay Farm Island. Judge Howard L. Bacon is in charge of the Oakland program. At Banning the Legionnaires will dedicate the local air port made possible by their own efforts.

PLANNING EXTENSION OF JUNIPERO SERRA ROAD

Preliminary studies and estimates for the proposed extension of the Junipero Serra boulevard into San Mateo county have been completed by City Engineer M. M. O'Shaughnessy of San Francisco, and have been submitted to the directors of the joint highway district created to carry on the project. Under the plan drawn up, nine miles of roadway would be added to the Peninsula arterial system at an approximate cost of about $2,800,000.

UNSIGHTLY SIGNS

In spite of the widely advertised "code of ethics" adopted some time ago by the billboard promoters, their habit of defacing the landscape and encroaching upon residential sections has by no means been abandoned.

Public sentiment has been so aroused in opposition to the billboard nuisance that a national committee for the restriction of outdoor advertising is making a vigorous campaign against the unsightly sign-boards which glare at one on every hand.

Among the organizations co-operating with this committee are the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the Garden Clubs of America, the National Conference of State Parks, the American Society of Landscape Architects, historical societies, automobile associations, nature societies, and others interested in the preservation of outdoor beauty.

Appeals are being made to advertisers direct, it being pointed out that an offensive advertising sign makes ill-will for the advertiser and tends to hurt rather than help his business.

let the electric range do
all the cooking

Every woman loves to cook—when the monotony of cooking is gone.

That is what the electric range does. It eliminates cooking monotony. Its harmonious white porcelain enamel makes kitchens attractive. Its perfect baking wins appetites. And its automatic time and temperature controls do the cooking while you're shopping or at the movies.

The oven of the new electric range heats up to 400 degrees in 9 to 11 minutes—as fast as one can mix biscuits. The open coil cooking elements are now made smaller to fit your pans. Heat that was formerly wasted goes to work. The result is, food cooks faster—less electricity is used.

SOVIETS CHANGE TUNE

One of the significant developments of the Russian situation during recent months is seen in the gradual recognition by the Moscow government of the necessity for restoring, partially at least, private property rights.

Under the avowed communistic plan all activities were to be subject to government control and operation. But this theory has been found difficult to maintain in practice. The ambitions and aspirations of human beings do not accommodate themselves readily to the communistic ideas. So reluctantly, but none the less steadily the Soviet government has opened to private capital and initiative certain avenues of activity. The latest development along this line has been in connection with the housing situation, which has become acute. As a Moscow dispatch to the Christian Science Monitor discloses:

"The need for new houses is so vital that the Soviet government recently decided to throw open the doors to private capital in this field. By a recent decree it practically restores the right of property in new houses which are built by private persons."

Yet, in spite of the apparent gradual breaking down of the communist system in Russia, we find in the United States some people who would commit this country to a similar experiment. But it will evidently be a hard task to convince a nation that is enjoying universal prosperity that the Russian method is the best.

PARIS PRAISES RUTH

In a popular ballot taken in Paris, Ruth Elder was chosen as one of the first ten "most illustrious women," a rather remarkable tribute to the girl whose plucky though unsuccessful attempt to fly across the Atlantic has brought her world-wide fame.

Among the selected ten, Madame Curie, co-discoverer of radium, was ranked first; Sarah Bernhardt, actress, second; Edith Cavell, executed English war nurse, third; Evangeline Booth, Salvation Army leader, fourth.

Inasmuch as the list evidently included both the living and dead, it may be questioned whether the selections were altogether appropriate, although each of these mentioned has high claim to distinction.

Anyway, it is pleasing to note that the Parisians were more chivalrous toward Ruth than the authorities of a Georgia town who tried to put her in jail on an old charge of taking a clandestine buggy ride with a preacher.

FREAK SHOT CLUB IS NOW REIGNING

List of Eligibles Presented in American Golfer.

Now that holes-in-one have been made on every year-old course in the land, the journalistic gentlemen who follow the game are digging up eligibles for a more exclusive mythical fraternity, the Freak Shot Club.

All you need to become a member are the proper circumstances—and a ton of luck. If you happen to play your ball from its lie in a bird's nest plop into the hole, or if your hopeless hook ricochets from a tree and becomes a hole-in-one, you're in. And you are in good company, as witness this list of eligibles presented in the American golfer.

Willie MacFarlane got in through a barn door—two barn doors, in fact. He was playing against Harry Hampton at the Aberdeen (Scotland) club. They were fighting hole for hole when Willie sliced a drive terrifically. It pulled up near a barn, far off the fairway. But Willie, opening the barn door, found a second door exactly opposite and the hole on a line 200 yards away. He had to hit a hard drive, measured in inches to get through both doors. But he did it stopping his ball within six feet of the hole.

Joe Demoss, former Wisconsin State champion, was matched with Warren K. Wood at Green Lake, Wis., when his drive from the eighteenth tee came down on top of a flat awning near the clubhouse. Demoss mounted the awning and, teetering precariously, slapped a beautiful brassie shot for the hole, ending a short chip-shot away.

Aubrey Boomer was as surprised as his gallery at the play that took him into the Freak Shot Club. The English star was playing a Lancashire tournament, when his drive landed in front of a two-foot bank over which he had to play. Using his spoon, he gave the ball a vicious cut. But instead of arching through the air the ball disappeared completely. After a mystified search, Boomer incredulously drew the ball from his pocket. It had struck the soft earth at the top of the bank, rebounded and hidden itself while he still had his arms extended in completing the swing. And what do the rules say about that one?

In the 1926 Canadian Open at Montreal, Leo Diegel, then the titleholder, found himself looking hopelessly on the long eleventh hole in the practice rounds, says the American Golfer article. His one hope to escape the flinch, he concluded, was to drive toward the twelfth fairway, which ran parallel on the right, and let her hook. Twice he did it in the regular play, and both times the hooks described a perfect semicircle—but landed 350 yards away and in the center of the eleventh fairway.

Olympic Coach Schulte Never on Cinder Path

Track Coach Henry F. (Indian) Schulte of the University of Nebraska, selected as one of the mentors of the 1928 United States Olympic team, never performed on the cinder path.

To his coaching credit, however, are many past Olympic performers and 1928 potential representatives.

There was the great Robert Simpson, who revolutionized hurdling and set world marks which only recently have been bettered. Jackson Scholz, speed marvel for more than a decade and still among the select, learned the art of sprinting under Schulte's direction. And now there are Roland Locke, holder of the world's furlong record of 20.5 seconds, and Falt Elkins, American decathlon champion and record holder.

Badger Coach Organizes Amateur Baseball Teams

Promoting amateur baseball in Wisconsin is the latest job assigned to Coach Leonard B. Allison, assistant athletic director at the University of Wisconsin, who has been appointed state athletic officer for the American Legion.

Allison was recommended for the post by Maj. John Griffith, commissioner of the western conference, who knew of his work in a similar position while at South Dakota State University. "Stub" as the Badger coach is better known, is making preliminary plans for a Wisconsin state baseball league.

Critz Hits Timely

Hughy Critz (shown in the photograph) has been hitting timely and fielding brilliantly for the Cincinnati Reds this season. The Cincinnati second baseman is one of the best in the league. Had he been going as well last summer the race might have ended differently.

The RETURN of ANTHONY TRENT

by WYNDHAM MARTYN

STORY FROM THE START

Anthony Trent, once master criminal, now reformed, returns to New York after four years' absence. He learns his friend, Capt. Frank Sutton, is in Sing Sing. Trent is surprised to find his New York apartment occupied by a stranger, Campbell Sutton, who represents himself as the brother of Frank Sutton. Trent is asked by Campbell to force a confession from Payson Grant, whom he accuses of having crookedly obtained all of Frank Sutton's property and then married the latter's wife. Trent starts on a campaign to accomplish the downfall of Grant. He learns that Captain Sutton has escaped from Sing Sing and later to his surprise, finds that Campbell is really Frank Sutton. Trent takes his place in society as the opening gun in his campaign against Grant. He becomes popular at once. To be invited as a guest at the Grant home is his first objective.

The butler was Albert Thorpe, who had taken service only with the bluest blood in his native land and the long est purses in the country of his adoption. He had come to the Grants from one of the great houses in Newport.

The two footmen, John Sprowston and William Carrow, had pedigrees which spoke of well-billed hours of easy toil. The women servants were as easy to classify, and he could not suppose for a moment that he had ever seen any of them. Mary Connor was the cook. Other names meant nothing to him. He noted that Natica Grant had a French maid named Dupin. She had a room at the top of the house, and took her meals with Miss Brewen, the housekeeper.

The guests, who had said unthinkingly that they were glad to meet him, were rich business men. None of them aimed at any higher society than that among which he found himself. Most of them had ceased to work, but none of them had yet learned to play.

So far as he knew, Trent had begun his adventure with every favoring wind of fortune. He had no suspicion to overcome, no character to enact but the one they desired him to be. And he knew that the Grants would be delighted if he stayed with them a month instead of a week.

It was at this moment, when he felt himself absolutely safe, that Anthony Trent, turning from the balcony, perceived some one had thrust a note under the door.

In all the years of his illicit adventuring, in all those desperate situations when capture seemed imminent, he had never been so conscious of the bitterness of impending disaster as when he stared at the note. Some forebodingly expressed him with the certainty that here was what would turn his dreams of victory into positive defeat.

It was addressed simply to "Anthony Trent," and the writing was, possibly, disguised. Yet it was the writing of an educated man or woman; which for the moment he could not tell. What guest in the Grant household would want to send him a letter in such a fashion as this?

Cutting the envelope, he drew out a letter of a few lines written on plain cream stationery. There was no signature.

"Some one in this house knows you and the purpose for which you are here."

"Unless you find some excuse to go away after dinner, and before midnight, you will be denounced to Mr. Grant. If you take this warning and act promptly upon it you will not be molested. If you ignore it you will be handed over to the police."

It was worse even than he had anticipated. Some one here had either recognized him or had private information concerning his errand. In any case, the next must be his for it was difficult to gather from the letter of how much the writer was aware. The definite statement that his purpose was known did not satisfy Trent, although the threat was sufficiently unequivocal. There was so much more he desired to learn. Whether, for instance, the writer had merely meant that it was Trent's desire to avenge Sutton which had brought about this warning. And the other interpretation was vastly more disturbing. Conceivably, he could abandon his task and go back to Sutton and admit defeat. This would be bitter enough to a man so sure of himself as Anthony Trent. But in such a case Sutton would be the only loser.

If, however, the unknown writer intended to convey the impression that Trent's past offenses were known, he would never again have a peaceful minute. Perhaps, after all, some ma-sign and slow-moving fate had chosen just such punishment for him as this when his former life was given up and he was performing a purely unselfish action for a man to whom he felt the utmost friendship.

He smiled a little ruefully as he realized that at least the function of dinner was permitted him. He must leave this Italian palace on shores of Jersey before the stroke of twelve. There was something melodramatic about the midnight touch. But where-as, before the receipt of this note his fellow guests had seemed colorless without interest and the meal a prospect of boredom, it was now a function of desperate intensity. Trent did not doubt that amongst these guests was the man or woman who asserted knowledge of his purpose.

He found himself placed on the right hand of his hostess. On her left sat a tall, thin old man, whose wrinkled and sunbaked neck eluded on all sides the encircling collar. He was introduced as Mr. Gilbert, a great traveler, and now devoted to the development of Texas oil fields. He had a direct way of stating at one and an uncompromising manner of speech he announced, and Trent could not be sure the remark was not aimed at him that he either liked a man on sight or hated him; if he liked a man that fortunate individual could have the Gilbert shirt. If he hated him, Gilbert would have the detested one's shirt.

It was this man, gimlet-eyed and talkative, who most interested Anthony Trent. He declared, for the benefit of those who cared to listen, that his memory for faces was infallible. He seemed eager to talk to Trent. The trouble was that Trent was not able to know whether Gilbert was in a shirt-giving or shirt-taking mood.

The lady on Trent's right, a Mrs. Fisher, plunged presently into the subject of jewel robberies. It was a subject which unmoored every tongue. Trent listened attentively. A dark, corpulent man at the other side of the table assumed that the recent Weld robbery had been committed by a gang of experts.

"I wouldn't wonder," he said, "but it was the same gang which took the great Mount Auburn ruby from my dear friend, Jerome Dunderbolt, some years ago. That was a mysterious crime, if you like."

Anthony Trent listened eagerly to an account of one of his own exploits. The dark man held that at least three had been involved in it. From this he passed on to discuss with grudging admiration, what qualities were needed for the perfect

Got Instrument That Suited Whole Family

"An agent was at our house the other day trying to sell us a piano," said the fat plumber.

"Did you buy one?"

"The thin carpenter naturally asked the question."

"No, because my daughter is the only one in the house who can play a piano."

"I see."

"And then he wanted me to buy a harp."

"I suppose you bought one."

"I did not. None of us can pick a harp."

"Did he try you on anything else?"

"Yes. Next he proposed a cornet, and when I didn't want that he suggested a ukulele."

"And you didn't take any of those?"

crook. "Such a gang would have a great haul here," he announced. "Not a chance," said Payson Grant. "I've burglar alarms, watchdogs and take every possible precaution. I'm willing to bet there isn't a house on the Jersey coast so carefully guarded as this."

"Why?" Trent asked. "Are you expecting burglars?"

"Not for a moment," Grant said hastily, "but one has to take precautions. There were some robberies at Spring Lake last week."

Sutton believed that some member of Grant's household would be engaged to protect him from the imminent assault of a vengeful convict. Sometimes such operatives were introduced as guests. The three men servants Trent had seen seemed to be merely highly trained people of their class. He had seen many such as to the guests, they seemed what he might have expected to find, well-fed, hearty men of money.

The dinner dragged its weary length along until ten. Anthony Trent thus had two hours in which to unmask his enemy or leave the house defeated. As he rose from the table he felt convinced that the writer of the note had not been one of his fellow diners. He was aware, ere half the meal was over, that the sense of imminent danger was removed.

Slipping away to his rooms, Trent scanned again the list prepared by David More, Connor, Dempsey, Miller, Davis, Mennon, Dupin, Applegate, Warner and Thompson. With the three men and Miss Brewen, the housekeeper, these made up the indoor help. Outside were Regan and his two men, Ropes and Sage. The gardeners lived in Asbury Park and had no business within the house.

Trent rang his bell and informed a footman that he wished to speak with the butler.

Albert Thorpe had been informed by Grant, who in turn had dragged it from Swithin Weld, that the young American had been an honored guest in the household of the earl of Rosecarrel. Thorpe was profoundly anxious to serve. He was reassured when Trent nodded curtly.

"I sent for you," said Trent, "because you must know about the maids, their references and so on."

Thorpe bowed with dignity. "I'll tell you what I want to know," Trent went on. "I have reason to believe that some one here desires to blackmail me for a youthful indiscretion. Now, I don't propose to submit to that sort of thing, and I am equally anxious to keep it concealed from my hostess. I am telling you this because you have seen life and understand."

"Indeed I do, sir," said Thorpe eagerly. "How can I help you, sir?"

"I want to find out if there is anyone here whose writing is like this."

Trent tore a line from the note. It read "after dinner, and before midnight, you will..."

Thorpe looked at his watch. It was half-past ten.

"How long can you give me?"

"Not more than an hour. I must go downstairs now if you have found out anything come and interrupt me, no matter what I'm doing. Say that Mr. Swithin Weld wants me on the long distance and won't give a message. I am in the habit of paying for any services, and I am sure you are discreet."

Never had a fourth at auction bridge been less ready for his favorite game than Trent. It was while he was dumpy that Albert Thorpe approached, suave and discreet.

"Mr. Swithin Weld on the long distance," he said in a voice all might hear. "He won't give a message, sir. He says he must speak to you personally."

Excusing himself Trent walked to a telephone booth made from a Sedan chair which stood in the hall. Lest prying eyes should be on him, he entered it, closed the door, and pretended to listen. If Thorpe had no com fort to offer, this fake call would lend color to any excuse he might be allied upon to account for an unpremeditated departure.

When a reasonable amount of time had elapsed he came out and saw the butler place a letter on a nearby chair. Pinned to it was the line he had torn from the mysterious message. The letter was written, a month earlier, to Mrs. Payson Grant. The sender, Marie Dupin, was apparently a teacher of the French language, and had been employed in households of rank and fashion. The writing of the two documents was identical.

Anthony Trent was sure he had never heard of Mademoiselle Dupin and doubted if he had seen her writing before. And yet she had threatened him.

Name "Dark Continent" Credited to Stanley

Africa is called the "Dark continent" on account of the fact that it was for many years an unexplored region. Henry M. Stanley, who knew more about Africa than anyone else, traversed its darkest part, and told the story of his travels under the title, "In Darkest Africa." Stanley's white aides, Surgeon Thomas Parke and Lieut. William Bonny, both published books in England after their return home, and others returned with them. So it is untrue that Stanley's white aides perished as claimed by A. Aloysius Smith, alias "Trader Horn." Leopold, king of the Belgians, financed the expedition for the relief of Emin Pasha and the exploration of the Congo. That is why the territory came under the Belgian flag.

The simile "Dark as Egypt" may relate to the fact that the Egyptians were superstitious, and, as people who were continually seeking omens, they avoided work on certain days.—Literary Digest.

Selfish Lives

Bishop William Lawrence of Massachusetts has retired voluntarily after 34 years of splendid service, on the ground that:

"Old men should give way in order that younger ones may have full opportunity of authority."

Bishop Lawrence's life has been one of self-sacrifice, and he has always hated selfish lives. In a recent Y. M. C. A. address he said:

"Some of our millionaires in their success talks preach an abominable philosophy. Only the other day a millionaire said to a high school graduating class:

"In this race for success lemme tell ye, young men, it ain't enough to know how to push yourself along—no siree! Ye gotta know how to push the other feller out o' the way."

Delving Into the Past

Evidence of the antiquity of man, from the caves of Europe and the deserts of the Near East, will be collected this year by an expedition of the Field Museum of Natural History of Chicago, headed by Henry Field, anthropologist. From the caves and anthropological sites of France, Spain, Germany, Austria, Hungary and Czechoslovakia, Yugo-Slavia, Switzerland and Belgium there will be brought specimens and artifacts, together with notes, sketches and plaster casts to be used in exhibits in the Field museum's proposed hall of prehistoric man. Mr. Field will also visit the north Arabian desert and the excavations at Kish in Mesopotamia.

Broad-Minded Preacher

Declining a fixed salary for the coming year, Rev. Edwin J. Radcliffe of Bloomsburg, Pa., proposed to his congregation that he receive such salary as is contributed in envelopes provided for that purpose, without names of the givers. The congregation accepted his proposal. The minister said he believed that a pastor should share in the adversity or prosperity of his people, and that his compensation should depend on his worth to the individual members of the church.—Exchange.

HANDS ACROSS THE SEA

Through the intrepidity of four skillful airmen flying in the monoplane Southern Cross, the United States and Australia have joined hands across the Pacific. The glory of the achievement, while primarily due to Australian initiative, is shared by America.

Captain Kingsford-Smith, the flight commander, and Captain Ulm, co-pilot, are Australians; Harry Lyon, navigator, and James Warner, radioman, are Americans. They flew from Oakland, California, to Brisbane, Australia, in three flights—from Oakland to Honolulu, then to the Fiji Islands, and finally to Brisbane. The last leg of the flight was the most perilous, the Southern Cross being beset by a severe winter storm, for be it remembered that it is now winter in the Southern hemisphere.

Each of the three legs of the great flight was a major achievement, and the successful accomplishment of all three in rapid succession without mishap was an epoch of the air.

Needless to say, the populace of Brisbane received the aviators with wild enthusiasm. G. A. Hancock, a millionaire sportsman, who backed the flight when all other sources failed, cabled the flyers congratulations from Los Angeles, making them a gift of the Southern Cross and cancelling all indebtedness. Mr. Hancock is entitled to the praise of the world for his part in this great flight.

The significance of the flight was tersely expressed in a message from President Coolidge to Captain Kingsford-Smith, which said: "Your brilliant, courageous pioneering has advanced the cause of aviation and strengthened the bonds between your commonwealth and our country."

PERILS OF KISSING

Ever so often some eminent doctor must have his fling at taking the joy out of life by issuing solemn warnings against the perils of kissing. One of the latest to herald the bad news is Dr. P. A. O'Leary of the famous Mayo clinic. He declares, as many have done before him, that kissing is likely to be the means of spreading disease germs, ranging from tuberculosis and tetter to housemaid's knee and halitosis. Says he: "Even the healthiest are liable to disease from germ infection, through careless osculation."

But, also like others of the kill-joy tribe, the good doctor doesn't know just what can be done about it. In spite of warnings, the ancient art of kissing still flourishes. It is even suspected that in certain quarters it is on the increase.

Yet few will deny that kissing has its perils. One of which, in certain cases, is that of getting caught.

NATIONAL ROAD BUILDING PROGRAM

A national road building program, so vast that the imagination can hardly grasp its significance, was urged by the United States Good Roads Association at its recent annual convention in Des Moines.

The proposal contemplates the building of 1,500,000 miles of paved roads during a period of twenty-five years, at an estimated cost of fifty billion dollars.

In resolutions supporting the plan, Colonel T. L. Kirkpatrick of Charleston, N. C., who successfully promoted North Carolina's $50,000,000 road bond issue a few years ago, said: "This effort on the part of the national government would create renewed confidence, stimulate the arteries of trade, energize commerce, enhance agricultural values, encourage profitable investment of private funds, and serve as a further inducement to states and counties in building communal and lateral roads."

The importance of the Association may be judged by the fact that more than 400 delegates, representing thirty-six states, attended the Des Moines convention, these delegates being for the most part outstanding leaders in their respective states, including many governors and other high officials.

While to some the Association's program may appear excessive, there is no doubt that such an enterprise would make for national progress, as well as greater national unity, if it could be financed in a manner not inconsistent with sound business principles and with due regard for other essential elements of the national welfare.

SALVAGING "BAD" BOYS

The problem of how to handle "bad" boys is an ever present one. Still, it may be questioned whether there are really very many boys who are absolutely bad. Good and bad being somewhat relative terms, it may be that most bad boys might be made into good boys by intelligent and sympathetic direction.

At the Berkshire Industrial Farm located at Canaan, New York, a valuable experiment is being made. The farm was established for boys sent from various city courts on charges of delinquency. The boys there receive academic instruction, combined with training in various trades and agriculture. An almost unique feature of the institution is that there are no locks or bars to keep them there. They are held in check by moral suasion and interesting activities.

Among these activities is the planting of trees, of which about 150,000 have been set out during the past year. These boys have been led to take an interest and pride in this and other phases of their work. As a consequence they are laying foundations for useful citizenship when they shall leave the institution to take their places in the world.

And it is gratifying to know that most of them do become useful citizens, as records of the school's "graduates" for several years testify.

ONLY A FACTORY GIRL

Miss Geraldine Mary Saracco, of New York, is only a factory girl. Her name indicates Italian origin. She is a "sample hand" in a dress factory, and ordinarily would not be expected to have any special ambitions or interests beyond those associated with her humble station.

But Geraldine had somewhere caught a vision of something finer than her humdrum factory existence. She heard that the Women's City Club was offering opportunities to deserving young women in industry by providing scholarships at the summer school of famed Bryn Mawr. She set about to qualify herself for such a scholarship, and won it.

This summer she will study economics, public speaking and related subjects in special courses offered each year to 100 working girls from all over the world. Among her classmates will be girls from the United States, Germany, Sweden and other countries.

This scholarship will give Geraldine Mary Saracco a chance to become something more than "only a factory girl." And the fact that she had the pluck to win her chance is the best indication that she will make good.

FAMOUS WOMAN HIKER

Of recent years many women explorers have braved the dangers of mountain, river and jungle in search of adventure or scientific knowledge. Among them Mrs. Alicia Renthall, an English woman, is one of the most daring. For twenty years she has been traversing remote wild regions, mostly on foot, and has been around the world six times. Her wanderings have carried her across Africa several times, as well as into Tibet, Arabia, Syria, India, Central America and elsewhere.

One remarkable characteristic of Mrs. Renthall is that in her jungle explorations she goes unarmed, carrying nothing more formidable than an umbrella. She recently said: "I have been quite close to lions and leopards in the bush, but they have never harmed me or any of my carriers. I always go unarmed, and I think wild animals know by instinct that I have no desire to kill."

While admiring Mrs. Renthall's superb courage, and taking her word for the harmlessness of lions and leopards, most folks would shrink from penetrating an African jungle armed with only an umbrella.

LINDY GETS EVEN

Colonel Lindbergh is good-natured, but some things get on his nerves. One of them is the song "Lucky Lindy," which he hates with a robust and persistent hate.

Knowing this, Chairman Bixby of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce and others sang the song at a Lindbergh banquet in New York, as a little joke. Lindbergh said nothing, but awaited his revenge. Next day he took Bixby and another of the singers for an airplane trip. Taking them to a great height he dived, and looped and spun until they were dizzy and sick. When their discomfort was complete, he turned around in the cockpit and shouted: "Now sing 'Lucky Lindy.'"

In Key West some of the primary election inspectors were paid as high as $80 each for counting the votes. Time was when a whole election could have been bought for that much money.

There will probably be no international complications over England's refusal to admit Harry K. Thaw.

GOVERNMENT AGENTS HUNT ENGLISH BLACK CURRANTS

As an emergency phase in the war on the cultivated English black currant to prevent the spread of the white pine blister rust disease into California, government inspectors, F. G. Macomber and H. P. Backus are now inspecting Daly City and vicinity in order to locate and destroy plantings of the black currant.

Aiding in this war of ostracizing the black currants, which are the most susceptible of all plants to the pine disease, the state legislature at its last session passed a law making it a misdemeanor to grow, sell or distribute these bushes. The measure was passed in an effort to aid the federal government in its eradication work with black currants in order to protect the sugar pine timber, a true white pine, which is valued in this state at more than $120,000,000. The greater portion of this timber is located along the Sierra Nevada range.

Government pathologists, who have made a study of this white pine disease for many years, have found that it will not spread directly from one pine to another but must complete one phase of its life cycle on the leaves of the currant or gooseberry bushes. Of all the plants investigated they found that the cultivated English black currant (Ribes nigrum) is the most susceptible of all the disease pores which come from the infected pines.

Although the disease has not been found in California as yet it is, however, established in British Columbia, Washington and Oregon. Its presence in Oregon makes it of vital importance to this state. Cultivated black currants have already been eradicated in Washington, Oregon and

And in pursuance of an application and recorded notification by said Otto Oshinghaus and Olga Oshinghaus, his wife, on the 19th day of March, 1928, and recorded on the 19th day of March, 1928, the holder of the note to secure payment of which the aforesaid deed of trust was executed, declaring that default had been made in the payment of the principal sum, including interest and other sums due under said note and deed of trust, and requesting and directing California Pacific Title & Trust Company, a corporation, trustee named in said deed of trust, to sell the real estate described therein to satisfy said indebtedness.

Now, therefore, California Pacific Title & Trust Company, a corporation, trustee named in said deed of trust, does hereby give notice that on Monday, the 23rd day of July, 1928, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, and at the office of the California Pacific Title & Trust Company, in the City of Redwood City, County of San Mateo, State of California, it will sell at public auction to the highest bidder for cash in lawful money of the United States of America, that certain piece or parcel of land as a whole, situate, lying and being in the City of Daly City, County of San Mateo, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to-wit:

Lot Twenty-nine (29) and Thirty (30) in Block Twelve (12) as designated on map entitled "Map No. 1 Vista Grande, San Mateo County, Calif.," which map was filed in the office of the Recorder of the County of San Mateo, State of California, on November 5, 1906, in Liber "C" of Maps at page 35, and a copy entered in Liber 4 of Maps at page 41. the northern portion of this state.

The peculiar nature of the disease which requires an alternate host in order to spread, is used as a means of checking it. Investigations have definitely shown that the disease will not spread directly from pine to pine, but must go back to the leaves of the currant bush. If all currant and gooseberry bushes could be removed the disease would be stamped out when the trees already infected would die and it never could spread. Unfortunately this step is not feasible, so only the very susceptible black currants are being removed as an emergency preventive work.

The control work is being conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture in co-operation with the California Department of Agriculture, the State Board of Forestry and the University of California, aided by forest service and various members of the State Extension Service.

C. A. Root, of Sacramento, who has charge of the eradication work in California, says: "All residents of this county who have black currants can aid in this forest protective measure by pulling them up and destroying them." Or by notifying Fred C. Brosins, quarantine inspector, Room 10, Ferry Building, phone Sutter 6128, and the inspector will remove the bushes free of charge.

"The Covered Wagon," which has been acclaimed one of the most interesting pictures ever filmed, is to be shown at the State Theatre, corner of Mission and Oliver streets, next Thursday, July 5. If you have seen this picture you will want to see it again, and if you have not seen it, you should do so by all means.

SIDELIGHTS

After twenty years as a country newspaper editor, W. O. Saunders, of Elizabeth City, N. J., prints this bit of wisdom: "I have learned that the American people have a lively passion for the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, about everything and everybody—except themselves and their family connections."

Long legs and body saved Edward West, 6 feet tall and 69 years old, when he fell into a well at Colchester, Conn. The well was 20 feet deep with 5 feet of water. West fell head up, but sank in the mud until the water covered his mouth and almost shut off breathing through his nose. He was rescued after tiptoeing for an hour.

Another tradition gone blooey. For centuries the dove has been hailed as the emblem of peace, but now comes Dr. Funkhouser, professor of zoology in the University of Kentucky, who says that in their domestic life doves are among the most quarrelsome of birds.

There will be a double feature bill at the State Theatre, Mission and Oliver streets, next Sunday, Bebe Daniels in "Feel My Pulse," and the beautiful Helen Costello in "Finger Prints." Both pictures come most highly recommended.

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

Eight thousand World War veterans and members of the American Legion in California, will march in the parade which will be one of the features of the tenth annual convention, which will be held in Stockton, August 13-15, according to figures being gathered by the committee in charge of the arrangements for the convention.

Andrew J. Camous of San Francisco last week was proclaimed the grand noble arch of the Ancient Order of Druids at the ballot count at the state convention in session at Sacramento. Mt. Shasta was voted the 1929 convention, winning out over Chico and Bakersfield.

California will be represented at the national rifle matches at Camp Perry, O., August 26 to September 15, by a team of thirteen marksmen selected at competitive shoots. Adjutant General R. E. Mittelstaedt has announced. Northern California riflemen will compete for places at Leona Heights, Oakland, and southern residents at Burbank. Both matches will be June 30 and July 1. M. C. Dolson, San Leandro, and N. E. Cutting, Los Angeles, have charge of the tryouts.

Six hundred and sixty-two game and fishing law violators gathered in by game wardens during the last three months of 1927 paid $20,905 for their offenses, and in addition some served jail sentences aggregating 1,035 days, the Fish and Game Commission has reported. The game case offenders numbered 431, the fines paid totaled $12,910 and the jail sentences 662 days. Fishermen paid $7,995 on 231 offenses and served 375 days.

On July 1 California will launch the first scientific attempt of the state government to cure and rehabilitate narcotic drug addicts. The first state narcotic hospital is to be opened on that date in Los Angeles county, a few miles from Pomona. Earl E. Jensen, state director of institutions, in direct charge of the new humanitarian undertaking, has secured the services of Dr. Thomas F. Joyce of New York City as medical superintendent of the hospital.

"When meaner and wickered bucking horses are raised, Ukiah cowboys will ride them," is the slogan that comes from Ukiah as their seventh annual rodeo is nearing the starting date of July 1, 2, 3 and 4. Many well known performers will participate in this rodeo which will endeavor to revive the colorful early wild west days of three-quarters of a century ago, when the Redwood Empire was accessible only by horse trail and was inhabited by a few hardy western pioneers. Arrangements to house the crowds who are expected for this event are practically completed, the Redwood Highway Association announced.

A plan to organize a state system in California which would be the most up-to-date unit of its kind in America will be placed before the 1929 legislature, it was revealed last week. Charles E. Hand, former sheriff of El Dorado county, is the designer of the plan which will be presented to the legislature by Assemblyman H. E. Dillinger of Placer county and Percy West of Sacramento. Under the Hand plan the new department would be placed under the state division of motor vehicles and would incorporate the present state traffic officers, the fish and game wardens, many of the present county deputy sheriffs.

Twenty-five California millionaires died during the last year, but the Federal government still classes this state as fourth in the nation in number of men whose wealth has reached the $1,000,000 mark or better. This was announced recently by State Controller Ray L. Riley, who added that "California has become an outstanding market for securities as a result of the amount of wealth concentrated on the Pacific Coast." The largest estate handled by Riley's department during the last year in collection of inheritance taxes was that of Arabella Huntington of Los Angeles, approximately $20,000,000. During the last year, Riley said, the state government collected inheritance taxes totaling $11,000,000,000.

The longest non-stop flight in history will be attempted in July by Dr. Hugo Eckner, famous Zeppelin builder, who will pilot a huge dirigible from Friedrichshafen, Germany, to the Pacific Southwest Exposition at Long Beach, a distance of approximately 10,000 miles. Definite word of Eckner's plan for this journey reached Mayor Oscar Hauge of Long Beach a few days ago and preparations were made to provide a temporary mooring mast at the exposition grounds. In attempting this remarkable air cruise, the dirigible will cross two-thirds of Europe, the Atlantic Ocean and the entire American continent.

Text books in use in California elementary and high schools are free from the propaganda of power trusts or any other organizations, in the opinion of Sam H. Cohn, deputy state superintendent of public instruction. Selection of the books is made only after a thorough investigation by the text book committee for just such propaganda, Cohn said. "If anybody can show us that there is any objectionable material in any book in use in California schools, we will take steps to eliminate it," the school marshall stated.

The Stars and Stripes in the summer sky.
Today we turn from the tasks to do
To take a day to our faith renew;
To doff our hats to the flag above;
To give one day of our year to love.
Today we pray that we may go on
In the way our fathers have lived and Proud of our place 'neath the flag that flies
In folds of glory against the skies.
God of all flags, and all nations, make Us clean and true for the whole world's sake.

Robert Morris Great in Misfortune as Firm in Patriotism

The last will of Robert Morris, the financier of the Revolution, was recently taken from an old box in the basement of City hall at Philadelphia and has been restored by experts. In the will is revealed Morris' attitude toward his reverses in later life. As is well known, the great financier indulged in land speculations in his old age and lost his fortune. He even spent some time in a debtors' prison. The will is dated March 13, 1804. To one son he gave a watch which had been given to Morris by his father and which "had been carefully kept and valued by me ever since." Another son was given a gold-headed cane, the head of which was presented to Morris by "the late John Hancock, Esq., when president of congress. The cane was the gift of James Wilson, Esq., whilst a member of congress." Mrs. Morris and two daughters received the residue of the estate. The conclusion of the will reads as follows: "Here I express regret at having lost a very large fortune, acquired by honest industry, which I had long hoped and expected to enjoy with my family during my own life and then to distribute it among those of them that should outlive me. Fate has determined otherwise, and we must submit to the decree, which I have done with patience and fortitude."

HISTORIC EDIFICE

Carpenters' hall stands second only to Independence hall in interest among Philadelphia's historic buildings. It was built between 1770 and 1792 by the Carpenters' company, an association of master carpenters, as their meeting place. The first Continental congress met in the unfinished structure September 5, 1774. In 1787 the constitutional convention assembled there and framed the Constitution of the United States. During the Revolution the basement was used as a magazine for ammunition, and from 1791 to 1797 the building was the home of the first bank of the United States. It now contains many historic relics.

Hog cholera causes the greatest loss among hogs of any of the contagious diseases. Probably 90 per cent of the hogs that die after they are full grown, die from this disease. It may be prevented by vaccination.

Superiority of the swine sanitation system over the old way of raising pigs with no thought to the cleanliness of their surroundings lies in the fact that the new method protects the young porkers against roundworms and other associated troubles which in the past have taken a heavy toll.

MEMORIAL SHAFT FOR HISTORIC FORT WASHINGTON

From a Sketch of the Remains of Old Fort Washington, in Upper New York, Around Which Revolutionary History Was Made.

Great Shaft to Mark Site of Old Fort Washington

Elaborate plans have been made for restoring historic Fort Washington and marking the site with a suitable memorial. A portion of the ground occupied by the fort has been set aside as a public park. The plans include the rebuilding of the famous ramparts and other details of the stronghold in their original form. From the site of the fort will also rise a great marble shaft similar to the familiar Bunker Hill monument, but rising to a greater altitude and set upon a more elaborate base.

The Fort Washington monument will rise to a height of 280 feet from the crest of the highest ground on Manhattan island. It will easily dominate the northern regions of the city and be a conspicuous landmark from the harbor as well as from points far up the Hudson river. The new shaft has been designed by Stoughton & Stoughton, the same architects who designed the Soldiers and Sailors' monument, just five miles southward.

Despite New York's wealth of historic associations it has no adequate memorial of the Revolutionary period. It is considered especially fitting that such a memorial should take form on this historic spot of the Revolution. The Fort Washington shaft will doubtless be pointed out in future as one of the show places of New York. Boston has taken great pride in its Bunker Hill monument, and uncounted people have visited it. The popularity of the monument has increased with the years, and only recently it has been found advisable to illuminate it at night. The proposed monument on the site of Fort Washington will doubtless prove no less interesting and will serve to acquaint future generations with the stirring history of the old fort of many tragic memories.

To Be Accurate Historically

The restoration of the fort will be carried out with intelligence and sympathy. By a fortunate chance a considerable section of the area occupied by the main fortifications has been preserved. When the city came to be laid out, several streets crossed the site and rows of apartment houses now closely encroach upon all sides. The greater part of the fortifications on the south, however, has not been built upon in a century and a half. A slight elevation may still be observed which once formed part of the ramparts.

The historians who have made a study of this region have been aided by several old maps prepared by British officers, which show in detail the original forms of the fortifications. With these guides much of the ground once covered by the fort has been carefully dug over and the earth sifted for relics of the past. Many interesting mementoes both of the American and British occupation have been discovered. These include hundreds of buttons from the uniforms of the soldiers once encamped here, which serve to identify the various regiments of both armies. Many years ago when a farmhouse was built here many tons of cannon balls and other relics were discovered and sold as junk.

The old drawings of the fort indicate that the ramparts originally had a height of ten feet. In restoring the fort these ramparts may not be built to this height, but they will be rebuilt in their original form to visualize the old fortifications. The ramparts were broken at several points by Sally ports. The drawings indicate their exact position, so that it will be possible to restore these interesting details.

Monument to Be Imposing

The monument will be built of granite, including the elaborate colonnade. Although its general lines suggest the Washington and the Bunker Hill

SONG OF PEACE

By JOAQUIN MILLER

The grass is green on Bunker Hill,
The water's sweet in Brandywine;
The sword sleeps in the scabbard still,
The farmer keeps his flock and vine.
Then who would mar the scene today
With vaunt of battle-field or fray?
The brave corn lifts in regiments
Ten thousand sabers in the sun;
The ricks replace the battle-tents,
The bannered tassels toss and turn,
The mighty steed, the bugle's blast—
These be the stories of the past.
The earth has healed her wounded breast,
The cannons plow the fields no more;
The heroes rest! O, let them rest
In peace along the peaceful shore!
They fought for peace, for peace they fell;
They sleep in peace and all is well.

monuments, the shaft at Fort Washington will have several distinctive features. The graceful colonnade or peristyle at its base will be an interesting decorative feature. This in turn will be flanked by groups of trees and thick foliage. The shaft will be ornamented with appropriate designs which will relieve the rigid appearance of so tall a marble. An interesting feature of the decorations will be a plan of the original fort carved deep in the face of the granite base, as shown in the accompanying illustration. It has not been decided if the monument will be built solidly of granite or as a hollow shaft like those at Washington and Boston. In the case of these monuments visitors can ascend to a point near the apex to enjoy the view from this altitude. The view from the top of the Fort Washington monument up the Hudson river and eastward and to the south across the city will well repay visitors for the effort of climbing to this elevation.

Washington Saw Disaster.

The old drawings indicate the positions of several barracks and other buildings inside the fortifications. In the excavations no trace could be found of these buildings. It is supposed that they were of temporary construction, doubtless of wood, without foundations. The lines of these buildings may be indicated in the fort. It is possible to mark exactly the position of the main entrance to Fort Washington, which was the scene of its greatest tragedy. When the fort was attacked by overwhelming British forces the most persistent resistance was made at the southern entrance, and here the loss of life was greatest. Washington viewed the conflict from the opposite side of the Hudson and it is recorded that he wept at the sight of this disaster.

Following the fall of the fort, it will be recalled, the American forces were marched southward for almost the entire length of Manhattan island to New York, which then occupied only its southern tip. Here the soldiers were imprisoned under most painful conditions and but a small part of them lived to be freed on Washington's triumphant entry. The old drawings and the painting study of the site of Fort Washington, made in recent years, make it possible to re-

"WHEN in the course of human events . . . Words that nurtured a great cause; held struggling men together until victory; inspired faith in adversity, founded a nation, withstood assaults—these are the words that start the preamble of the Declaration of Independence.

Yankee Ships Brought Tea to Boston Harbor

In quaint old Nantucket may still be found the ship offices from which were dispatched the vessels of the famous Boston tea-party, with the names of the ships still above the door.

Long before the Revolution, a great fleet, manned by fearless sailors, ventured out from Nantucket to distant seas in search of whales. The richest prizes were found in the south Pacific, which was reached by way of Cape Horn, and a voyage frequently took from three to four years. So successful were these expeditions that Nantucket became famous, and its whale-oil and candles made of whale-oil were shipped to many lands, writes Francis A. Collins, in St. Nicholas.

It chanced, just before the American Revolution, that three Nantucket ships, the Dartmouth, the Beaver and the Bedford, carried cargoes of whale-oil to England. For their return trip, an arrangement was made with the East India company to bring back to Boston cargoes of tea. The story of the jettisoning of their cargoes in Boston harbor, with far-reaching results, is of course familiar.

Powder From Georgia Fired at Bunker Hill

Although the battle of Bunker Hill was fought in Massachusetts and by New England folk, Georgia in the far South played an important part in it by furnishing the major portion of the all too scant supply of gunpowder.

In the magazine at Savannah, built of brick and buried twelve feet underground, was stored a comparatively large amount of ammunition which Governor Wright deemed unnecessary to protect.

The colonists broke into the magazine and took 600 pounds of gunpowder.

The gunpowder was sent to Beaufort, S. C., for safe keeping and was then sent on the next boat to Boston, where, in the battle of Bunker Hill, it illuminated the opening drama of hostilities.

LIZARD COUSINS

The Chameleon looked at the Red Lizard out of his curious eyes with their circular eyelids.

"I do not think," he commenced, "that one is wonderful simply because one belongs to a different family or hasn't just the same ways as all the creatures under the sun.

"For naturally all the creatures belonging to the different families have habits and ways that are not like each other's.

"But I am very, very different." "I suppose," said the Lizard, "that because you say 'very, very' that it makes all the difference.

"If you only said you were 'very different' it would not amount to anything.

"But as you are 'very, very different,' it means a great deal."

"That's just it," said the Chameleon delightedly. He had changed to another color for his disposition was much improved now.

"It's this way," he continued. "I am very much like a lizard."

The Lizard giggled with pleasure.

"And I am not so unusual looking at first. I have a tail and my feet can grasp the branches, which makes me a very fine climber.

"But above all my body is very cold to touch—nice and refreshing and cool I'd say."

"Something like cold lemonade the children drink at the circus," said the Lizard.

"Not at all like that," said the Chameleon crossly. "Because I cannot be used as a drink at a circus. I am cold to the touch—not to the taste!"

"Oh," said the Red Lizard, "I understand now."

"Glad to hear it," said the Chameleon. "And yet of all these things I am not proud because I have something so much better of which to be proud.

"I can change colors. There are little cells in my body, some of them deep, and some not so deep, and they give me different colors when I feel angry or happy or frightened.

"They also change with the colors about me and the kind of weather we're having.

"Oh, I'm very interesting."

"That's true," said the Red Lizard, "you are very interesting, and you have a great deal of which to be proud.

"The colors you change to are beautiful and you are lovely because you have so many different costumes."

The Chameleon was much pleased. "I am glad to hear you say so and I always did think my distant cousins, the Lizards, a fine family with good taste."

And as the Lizard crawled back home, for the Chameleon had an engagement, he was proud indeed that he was a relative.

Pits Rich in Fossils

Children will soon romp on the spot where, untold ages ago, the ferocious saber-tooth tiger tore at the vitals of prehistoric mammoths, when the famous La Brea fossil pits in Los Angeles are turned into a public park. Plans are completed and work is soon to be started on this tract, with the object of preserving as much as possible the natural landscaping of the site. These pits are the richest in fossils of any locality in this country. Already thousands of fossils of saber-toothed tigers, giant ground sloths, giant wolves, mammoths, mastodons, lions, camels, peccaries, tapirs and birds have been recovered. Concrete replicas are to be made of some of the more familiar species and set up in the park.

Rare News

The leader in this game picks up a newspaper and begins to read any item having fairly long, well punctuated sentences. At the first comma he inserts before the pause the word "before"; at the next comma, the word "behind"; and so on alternately. Before each semicolon he reads "before and behind." The effect is very funny and it takes some time for the listeners to discover the cause.

Stop Sleeping Sign

Little Henry loves to ride in the car. A sign never misses his eyes.

A few days ago when calling, the baby awoke crying lustily. I said:

"Well, Henry, does sister cry every time she wakes?" The disgusted reply was, "I'd say she does. That's her stop-sleeping sign."
